The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JUNE 23, 1866.

Two lines of a telegram have deprived us of all the innocent pleasure, we should have derived from the continental correspondence of the London papers. What use is it now to read long speculations from Vienna or Berlin concerning the likelihood of war, the movements of troops, the dispatches which had been written, or were supposed to have been written, or were expected to be written, by Austrian and Prussian diplomatists. We all know that events have taken place which utterly change the face of the negotiations and the prospects of Europe. It is possible of course that war may be declared. The conferences which take place after battalions have been mobilised, passions stirred to their depths, and half the cost of a campaign incurred, but before a shot has been fired, or the expected excitement even tasted, are very apt to end in that which they were especially called to avert. It is absurd, people have often said, in reviewing the course of European history, to see how it has happened that exhausting strugles ending in no military result have been the prelude to negotiations and treaties that might as well have been entered into before a sword had been drawn. The truth is, however, that the exhaustion produced by war is sometimes the only lesson which will bring nations into a state of mind which renders the action of diplomacy possible. Secretaries of state, sovereigns and in a still greater degree, the members of representative assemblies are liable to be carried away by sanguine trust in their own luck, even if they can control the temporary insanity of passion. A war is of course a game of chance as compared with slow processes of negotiation in the nature of legal proceedings, and while nations are, as it were, in the possession of health and spirits they are disposed to trust their luck. It is only when wearied and worn out by war, with hopes depressed and ambition damped, that the dull, cold remedy of a congress is accepted as a relief from worse evils.

This is the consideration which may lead observers to distrust the result of the present political meeting, so far at any rate, as its influence is expected to bring about a peaceful adjustment of the German quarrel. On the other hand there are hopes for the congress because of the magnitude of the operations it will be called upon to undertake. If it were merely called to mediate between the would be belligerents, there would be very little hope of success, but it would appear in various ways, that the abolition of the treaties of 1815 is the real object which NAPOLEON has had in view in arranging the congress. The speech at Auxerre is made too appropriately to be overlooked as the accidental expression of an old feeling. The Emperor's feeling of detestation for the treaties is old enough no doubt, but it was because he saw his way to attacking them successfully that he allowed the feeling to become apparent. The treaties of 1815 even in their shattered and dilapidated state, are a standing insult to the BONAPARTE dynasty. They were the result of Europe's triumph over the first NAPOLEON; the solemn compact by which the powers agreed amongst themselves to put down France. To render it impossible that France should at any time "leap awake to his voice" was the great problem before the Vienna congress. All the diplomatists conspired to invent a chain of which no links should break, and the treaties of 1815 were offered to the world as the result of their combined efforts. It is hardly too much to say that every other political consideration was sacrificed to the one transcendant object of curbing the ambition of French rulers through all future time. The principle of nationality was utterly ignored, the right of provinces to decide their own fate was treated with systematic scorn, countries were carved into shapes till then undreamed of, and all this was done simply to subserve the great object of keeping down France.

It is easy to understand therefore that the heir of NAPOLEON I. should "detest" the treaties of 1815 and that apart from any material advantages which might accrue to himself he would take a keen delight in making a fresh European congress demolish the work of Vienna, and solemnly declare that the treaties were a failure. He would have desired this equally no doubt, if the treaties had worked with moderate success but the utter confusion into which they have fallen must have excited the desire to the utmost by bringing its object perpetually within reach In all but the name indeed they have been annihilated. Belgium, the Kingdom of Italy, the Danish dynasty in Greece, are monuments to their distruction. Savoy and Nice have changed hands, Austria herself revised the treaties in Poland, GARIBALDI swept their rags out of southern Italy when Cavour had torn them to pieces in the north, England laid down the only territorial advantage they were supposed to confer on herself in abandoning the protectorate of the Tonian Islands and then at last Prussia gave a helping hand to the work of demolition. To her the treaties had been a source of unalloyed advantage. The Rhine provinces were added to her dominions so that they might be used as one of the barriers against France, and her dignity in Europe was sensibly augmented by the acquisition. Other benefits accrued to her as well, but forgetting these, Prussia invaded the Danish Kingdom for the purpose of obtaining a seaboard and converting herself into a maritime state. This last proceeding has put a winning card into the hands of the Emperor of the French. The treaties of 1815 have not only been broken, they have now been outraged, and the way has been prepared for the policy of Napoleon III. Not as a demand, that would be inconsistent with the quiet prudence and pertinacity of his statesmanship, but as a suggestion prompted by the visible circumstances of the time will come the proposal for a formal abandonment of the old treaties which have proved such utter failures and the reestablishment of European peace on a new territorial basis. In this way is it possible that the interest of the greatest political event since the battle of Waterloo may overwhelm the quarrel between two German states. What or where will the German confederation itself be after the congress? The face of the continent may be changed.

WE need hardly point out to our readers, how very difficult it is to obtain correct information on commercial affairs, especially with reference to the share market. We cannot promise that the information which we usually give will always be found correct, because we have no means of checking it, but we can assure our readers that whenever we are misled into error, no guilty knowledge nor sinister design should be attributed to us. However, if we are at times made the medium of incorrect information, we can at all events acknowledge our errors whenever they may be pointed out. For instance in the last issue of the Trade Report, we quoted as from Sharp & Co's. circular, China Traders Insurance Stock at 2 per cent discount, it should have been 2 per cent premium as Messrs. Sharp correctly gave it. This however was a mere accidental misprint. Again Messrs. Sharp & Co. quoted Hongkong, Canton and Macao Steam-boat shares at 33½ per cent discount. We have undoubted information that sales and transfers have been made at 10 per cent, and that there are plenty of buyers but no sellers at 15 per cent. Again, we gave the stock of Camphor at 2400 piculs quoting it $27 whereas the market had been swept at $27½ and there are buyers at that figure. We have great confidence in the correctness of our information on this article, and suppose the sales which swept the market had not come to our informant's ears. We shall esteem it a favor in any of our readers pointing out such errors as these. By doing so, the attention of the public will be called to the misquotations, and the movements of the market in respect thereof, narrowly watched.

The Commercial Bank.

WE have received a letter from Mr. Shaw, the manager of the Commercial Bank, informing us that we have been grossly misinformed and to quote his words "secondly to beg that you will publish my unqualified denial of the assertions contained in your article." There is the denial and if it is any satisfaction to Mr. Shaw to see it published, well and good. At the same time we cannot pretend to think ourselves grossly misinformed. On the contrary we know that the story we told is a very accurate account of what took place, except in one particular. The attempt to deprive Mr. ANDERSON of his money, was made, not on the steps of the Bank but away from the premises altogether. He had walked for some distance along the Queen's Road, when the Commercial Bank people came running after him and he was attacked on the steps of the club, a circumstance which makes the whole transaction, if it were not so supremely ridiculous, approximate still more nearly than we at first supposed, to highway robbery.

It is evident that a garbled account of the story so far as the actual struggle was concerned reached Mr. Shaw's ears. He was not present himself and consequently must have trusted to the narrative of others, ashamed perhaps of what had taken place. It is very imprudent of him; however, to risk a denial on his own word, when he is not acquainted from his own knowledge with the facts to which the denial alludes.

Literature and Society in London.

From a Correspondent.

LONDON, 10th May, 1866.

London is seen this month, under its brightest aspect. It is high tide in Rotten Row, "the horsemen and the coachmen are pouring in amain," the flowering shrubs in the squares, and the Prima Donne at the operas are coming into full bloom, the Royal Academy has opened, affording a welcome "Refuge for the Destitute" in conversational subjects, relief to taciturn gentlemen during the horrors of the middle passage from the drawing room to the dinner table—in short, the London season has fairly begun. Of course the great political events which are threatened, the war in Europe, and the redistribution of seats,—small borough members would be puzzled to decide which would be greater evil,—are the leading subjects of the newspapers and in a certain sense of private conversation, very few people being courageous enough to acknowledge indifference to the fate of Venetia, the security of the Rhine provinces, or the vindication of nationalities in Schleswig-Holstein. "Public interest is absorbed by the attitude of Prussia" write the political friends of the provincial press. Nothing of the sort. It is only intelligent persons, to begin with, who can be interested in the attitude of a foreign state, or who have a clear idea even of what is meant in diplomatic slang by an "attitude." At once therefore you reduce your interested public to the narrowest proportions. Each man, possessed with a firm conviction that salvation is only to be found in his own particular hobby would place that above the peace of Europe in the scale of importance. What for instance does it matter whether Prussia swallows Austria, or Austria Prussia, if we are to have no more coals? Will you, like our old friend Mr. Micawber "turn your attention to coals?" Britannia has lately been looking into the state of the cellar, and some of her friends calculate that if consumption goes on at its present rate, the stock will hold out a thousand years longer, in which case one would suppose there is no great cause for present uneasiness. Others, however, including Mr. Stuart Mill and Mr. Gladstone, declare that with the ever increasing development of manufacturing industry, it is more likely that consumption will increase, probably in a geometrical ratio, so that in ninety or a hundred years English coalfields will be exhausted to a depth of 4000 ft. when the expenses of working the coal will be too great for the operation to be remunerative. The grounds of consolation suggested are, that new methods of deep mining and new mechanical contrivances will probably be invented or that even if the coal should be practically exhausted the resources of science will in all likelihood discover some substitute for it. Possibly the consolation which is felt the most even if its outward expression is kept back, is that by the time coals run short we shall not be "around" as the Yankees say. Sufficient for the generation is the best Silkstone thereof.

The fiery flood of sensation novels is still pouring forth. Dainty dishes, in which bigamy robbery and murder are served up with various sauces, continue to regale us Miss Braddon's, being as usual the best flavoured and the most piquante. Amongst the newest that occur to me are "The Lady's Mile" (by Miss Braddon) "Plain John Orpington" and "The Hidden Sin" but the bookseller's lists will give you their names and I should hardly be disposed to give more. One of the most welcome of recent contributions to what we may call practical literature, is the narrative of the adventurous journey of Lord Milton across the Rocky Mountains in search of a Route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, through the British possessions in North America. The magnificent scenery of the almost untrodden wilderness through which he passed, the exciting and perilous adventures he and his party encountered, the manly, cheery, intrepid spirit with which all dangers and hardship were met, render that one of the most fascinating books of travels that have appeared for a long time.

The passes across the mountains to British Columbia present according to Lord Milton far less formidable natural difficulties than those of the American territory. British Columbia itself though rich almost beyond conception in mineral wealth is mostly unfavourable to the agriculturalist but immediately on the other side of the mountains the lies the fertile belt of Saskatchewan, with 65,000 square miles of the richest soil as yet unknown and neglected though lying but a step from the gold field of Cariboo, the wants of whose miners are at present supplied by California

Another book which will probably possess as much interest in your part of the world as in our own, is the lately published "Ten years in Sarawak by Mr. Charles Brooke, brother of the Rajah, Sir James; an animated and attractive account of a country luxurating in the wildest exuberance of animal and vegetable life and inhabited by races which in spite of some revolting practices seem likely to reward any pains that may be bestowed in civilising them. The thought that immediately suggests itself in the connection with the name of Dyaks is that their practice of "head hunting" which is not according to Brooke a mere pastime or a relic of cannibalism but a part of the terrible worship of Kali—another case of the baleful influence of superstition which in so many ages, in such various forms, and in the most opposite states of society, has deluged the earth with blood. The Dyak believes that his welfare depends on his satisfying the cravings of this vengeful goddess by these gory offerings which are suspended in the "head house" of the village that if any calamity befal him it is to be attributed to his having failed in the duty of propiating the goddess of blood and there is an anecdote that in the good old times, a young chief whose conscience accused him of some remissness in this respect, rushed out of his hut with the intention of amending his error and happening to meet his grandmother in the streets of the forest immediately deprived her of her head, offered it as an acceptable compliment to the goddess Kali and then returned home in peace of mind, with the satisfaction "that good men feel who have done a virtuous action." Mr. Brooke's work is full of curious information, as well as of lively anecdotes of war, the chase, and "society" in Borneo.

Lord W. Lennox's "Drafts on my memory" the successor of his "Fifty years Reminiscences" and Captain Gronow's new "Recollections" belong to a class which perhaps may have its uses in the wise economy of Nature where there is scarcely any substance for which some suitable purpose may not be found. We all remember Lord Palmerston's definition of dirt a something out of place, which when in place looses its opprobrious character. It is scarcely possible to imagine men searching the records of their memories for fifty years, and finding nothing better worth picking up than this farrago of flat and foolish stories, but weak and meagre in their style and pointless their anecdotes, they do help to make up our picture of the wretched period of the Regency to which they relate, and render us thankful that those days are gone in which pugilism was a really fashionable amusement, drunkenness the normal condition of gentlemen after a certain hour in the day, and the behaviour of those who still kept their places in society frequently such that we almost wonder at Captain Gronow's hardihood in recording it without any expression of disgust. I had intended to give you some account of Victor Hugo's last work the Travailleurs de Mer (already translated as the "Toilers of the sea" for which a wide popularity is anticipated but I must defer it to another opportunity. You will perhaps be glad to hear that a new work by the author of "Adam Bede" is announced for June. The title is "Felix Holt the Radical," and it is said to contain some of those descriptions of life in the Midland counties, in which the author is always so happy.

Police Report.

Hongkong, June 21st, 1866.
BEFORE THE HON. J. C. WHYTE.

Poor Thomas's trouble were not over, however, for he had scarcely left the Court, when a hawker charged him with another assault. There could be no doubt that he had been on a tremendous burs er, last night, and for this second offence he was sentenced to a fortnight's hard labour in gaol, and to pay the plaintiff $5 besides.

A stonecutter charged prisoner at the bar with attacking him near a Shed at West Point, and in company of two other fellows robbing him of a trunk and some other articles. Plaintiff seized prisoner, but did not succeed in holding him. Plaintiff came upon defendant suddenly yesterday and had him arrest d. At the latter's house was found a portion of former's property. There was no sufficient evidence to support the charge, and prisoner was discharged.

The Manager of the Mahomedan Cemetery, Westpoint, was charged with erecting a matshed on said burial ground without permission. Case remanded till the 29th instant.

Three parties, belonging to a house where crackers had been fired were brought into court and charged with the offence, but alleged that they were not the evildoers, and were unable to find them out. They were discharged, but warned that they had better look out as, perhaps, a law would be passed shortly to stop this abominable nuisance effectually.

The Usher of the court brought a similar charge against a number of houses of ill fame, all in Wellington street, evidently a favorite street for the celestial expressions. Sentence:—a fine of $100 against each house, and landlord responsible for the amount.

A boatbuilder, dwelling at Saikiwan, charged prisoner with robbing him of a bed, or something of the sort, this morning. He found him in flagrant delicto, and handed him to the gentle care of a policeman.—Plea poverty, no chow chow, &c. Sentence:—to gaol for six months.

Chin Che, house coolie to Mr. Pauncefote, charged prisoner with stealing his jacket this morning, defendant, a chair coolie, pretended to have bought the jacket, which proved a slight prevarication from the truth, and prisoner was sent to gaol for one month, with hard labor.

June 22nd 1866.

Three boys were charged by a Parsee gentleman of the firm of Cowasjee, Pallanjee & Co. residing in Lyndhurst Terrace, with kicking up a most infernal and indecent row in No. 7, the house opposite. When they expostulated with them, complainant and his friend were laughed at. In company with these boys there was quite a bevy of gay Celestial Cyprians, all of them joined in uncommonly boisterous merriment at the plaintiff. They were given in charge and punished, according to their deserts, in the following manner:—1st defendant, the apparent proprietor of the house was fined $20, the other two prisoners $5 each. The house No. 7. evidently a brothel, will be further proceeded against.

Mr. O'Toole Inspector of nuisances charged the two occupants of sheds No. 7, and 11 in Central Market, with adding lofts to their stalls without permission. Case remanded for a week Defendants were advised in the meantime to see the Surveyor General and follow his instructions.

Mr. O'Toole lodged a further complaint against the lessee of some place in Central Market with obstructing the road by placing baskets there, as well against another party with blocking up the entire passage from the Praya to Central Market with his goods. First defendant was fined $6; the second one, in consideration of his having been punished before for a similar offence, had to pay $8.

Inspector William Nelson complained of the proprietor of Marine Lot No. 198, Praya West, in not providing proper cook ranges, &c., in some new Houses now completed and tenanted. Defendant had been summoned and warned before and had promised to attend to the matter. He now opined, his tenant would look after this "pidgin." But the Court looked to him only and he was accordingly mulcted in the mitigated penalty of $25, but warned that if within a week drains and ranges had not been fixed, he would be fined $50 and so on every week until he had complied with the ordinance to that effect.

Mr Gindell, bookbinder, accused his foreman of purloining a piece of leather. Charge not proved, and prisoner dismissed.

A Chinaman, overseer of work, was taking a quiet nap yesterday afternoon at half-past three o'clock in a shed, near a dwelling the construction of which he was superintending. Before laying down he had hung up his umbrella on the door of the shed. He awoke in consequence of a noise, and then found prisoner struggling with some of the workmen of plaintiff. Prisoner, it appears, had attempted to "pukarow," the umbrella and the men were endeavoring to prevent him from doing so. He was then arrested, but had attempted in the meantime to make a cut at a constable, who seized the knife, and found another weapon of the same sort on the prisoner's person. Sentenced to gaol for six months with hard labor.

A watchman of a gambling house who, it appears, had been played at the game of "hide and seek" with a constable was eventually seized by the latter and charged with being a suspicious character. Prisoner had offered the constable a bribe, if he would allow him to escape. Defendant was discharged, but had to find some sureties for good conduct for at least six weeks

Miss Linhas of No. 169, Hollywood Road, was quietly walking along the road last night at 10 o'clock in company with another frail one. On the corner of West street three men were seen standing. They had scarcely passed these, when the fellows rushed at her and tore her earrings, off, she shouted out, and a police constable arrested the two prisoners, the other man escaped Case remanded till to-morrow.

In the Supreme Court of Hongkong.

22nd June, 1866.
CRIMINAL SESSIONS.
BEFORE THE HON. HENRY J. BALL, ESQ.
Acting Chief Justice.

Jury—Augustus Bauermeister,
Joaquim Pereira de Campos,
Robert Hodje,
James Wm Pearce,
John Stimson,
Edward Baker,
Alexandrino F. dos Remedios.

Reg. v Tsang A See—Burglary being armed. The Hon. Julian Pauncefote, Esq., Acting Attorney General appeared for the prosecution.

The prisoner pleaded "not guilty."

Chang A Fook declared,—I am a contractor and live near the Mint in a mat shed. I was there on the 14th of May. I, Cheng Sow Cheong and several others, 16 altogether. Tsang A see slept in the adjoining shed, Chang A Kit and Chang A Sin slept in the same shed with me. About 1 o'clock in the morning I was awakened by a great knocking at my door, and the wooden bolt was broken. Six or seven men entered the shed and a number remained outside. The prisoner is one; he had a lighted torch and a sword. They took a gold watch, 4 quilts, 1 blanket, 2 musquito curtains, 1 rattan mat, 10 umbrellas, 3 leathern boxes, 159 taels in one leathern box 65 pieces of wearing apparel (that belonged to me). I saw prisoner in a house. I went to the Police Court leaving a man to watch. I got a warrant I got a constable and went to house in Tai-loong lane. I saw the prisoner and several others gambling. I pointed out prisoner to the sergeant, I charged him. I asked people in the house where he lived, they said "upstairs," I went up with him and searched a box. The prisoner said it was his. I found some pawn tickets (identifies them.)

Lit a Man declared.—I am manager of a Pawnbroker's shop. I live in Queen's Road East, near Spring Gardens. A jacket and mat were brought to me on the 15th May. I cannot say prisoner is the man who brought the things.

Cheong a Yee declared.—I am a stone cutter, and work at the Mint. I remember the 15th May, I slept in Chang a Gook's shed, I know the prisoner I saw him that night, he was one of the burglars he had a sword and a lighted torch. I saw him again at the gaol I went there and picked out the prisoner.

George Forster, sworn.—Police constable 51. I arrested the prisoner in Ship Street Wanchi, complainant and another man were with me. I went to a house with complainant, he went up to a loft. I could see into the loft from where I stood, complainant got a box and brought it down. It was opened in the presence of the prisoner, prisoner said "That box belong my, but my no makee put that paper inside." (tickets shown to witness) Those are like the tickets I found, I went to a Pawnbroker's shop and presented the tickets and the mat and jacket were given to me. The box was not fastened.

Dennis Daly, sworn.—Inspector of Police. On the 22nd I put the prisoner with about fifteen men in the Gaol. I took ten men and two women to see if they could identify the prisoner, eight identified him. Cheong a Jee, Cheong a Sui, and Cheong a Kei, were there. Each man was brought up separately and the prisoner's jacket was changed each time. He was no connexion between the men who identified the prisoner. Each went and put his hand on the prisoner.

Prisoner in defence, said that he had had a quarrel with the Cheong family and they had got up the charge out of revenge.

His Lordship on addressing the jury remarked that it was rather singular that eight men should be able to pick out the same man and that nothing was easier than for witnesses to combine against a prisoner and identify him in the manner described by Inspector Daly. It was also peculiar that the family name of the witnesses should be the same.

The jury after a short discussion returned a verdict of "Guilty" by a majority of 6 to 1. Sentence. Two years imprisonment with hard labor.

The Commercial Panic.

(From the "Times" of May 10th.)

The great moral to be drawn from the present Financial Panic is that money is really not worth 80 per cent. A delusion upon this point was the source of the speculations which are now proving so unfortunate. Owners of money handed it over to organized Finance Companies with the expectation of receiving four or five times the amount of interest usually returned. The Finance Companies, bound to exact these rates of interest for the satisfaction of their shareholders, were compelled to make corresponding reductions in the quality of the securities obtained for their advances, and the result is what we now see. It is not to be assumed, and is probably not the fact, that any great proportion of these advances has been lost. The money is not lost, but it is locked up, and that, at a moment when it is imperatively needed, is almost as bad.

We have called this Panic "Financial" because it is in the new system of "Financing" that it has originated, and because the new Finance Companies feel the effects most severely. Of course the difficulty is complicated and aggravated by the calamitous prospect of European war, which depreciates ruinously the funds and securities of the States embroiled, and necessarily acts in some degree upon the whole money-market at home. But the depression thus created is comparatively slight, and it is due, moreover, as regards our own Funds, in some degree to other causes. Mr. Gladstone explained the other day that the present quotations of Consols indicated, not a diminution of the national credit, but an enhancement in the value of money. Our credit stands as high as ever it did, but the highest credit in the world is not proof against competition. No national creditor doubts for a moment that be will receive his three per cent. for his money, but people have now become unwilling to lend their money at three per cent. They expect at the l ast three and a half, and the actual price of Consols shows that they can get it, even on Government security. It is not probable, even if the world were at peace and the share-market tranquil, that the Funds would stand now where they stood in 1859. It is something, indeed, to find that the perfection of our credit saves us so much as it does, and that Consols can only be bought to pay three and a half per cent when judicious investments return six or seven, and unexceptionable securities nearly five.

But all this, though perfectly intelligible, will not explain the condition of the "finance" market, nor even help to explain it. The Panic in that quarter is special and peculiar, arising partly from the nature of the dealings adopted, and partly from the terms on which the capital was raised. If the capital of a company were represented by 50*l.* shares, and 5*l.* only of each share had been called up, every holder of a share would be liable to a demand and 45*l.* more. Practically this is unlimited liability, and so formidable is the obligation that nobody is willing to accept it when it looks like a reality. In theory, of course, the original investor in such a company should hold his money in readiness to meet any call up to the value of his shares, whether to provide for losses sustained or the needs of expanding business. But this is theory only; in practice, the speculator looks only at the actual price of the share, and thinks nothing of the contingency of further demands. If he has 5*l.* to spare, he buys not one share of that amount, but ten shares, with a payment of 5*l.* each. This leaves him with a liability extending to 450*l.* more, but of that obligation he takes little heed. In the ordinary state of the market, he would either never be called upon for further payments, or, if calls were made for business purposes, he could easily and without loss make a partial realization of his securities in order to meet them. But when a Panic sets in, this chance in gone, and gone just when it is most wanted. Calls are regarded, either with or without reason, as inevitable, and no money can be had for the occasion. At last we see shares at an actual discount—that is to say, shareholders offering money to any purchasers who will take them off their hands, and so relieve them of the dreaded obligation.

But how came these money-lending Companies to be without the money which is their stock in trade, and why should it be feared that they will call upon their shareholders for further contributions? The answer is to be found in the new system of business, which the new expectations of interest rendered almost inevitable. The Finance Companies raised their capital, or, in other words, obtained subscription from the public, on the faith of the profits which they promised. It was represented that the fabulous profits made by old banks and discount houses could, through the agency of Joint-stock Companies, be realized by the humblest individual. A capital of a million formed by 10*l.* shares was just as the same amount in the hands of a single millionaire, and would yield just as large a return. The doctrine, conditions of management being equal, was sound enough, though it should have been remembered that if there were twenty money-lenders in the market instead of one they would certainly undersell each other in some way. And they did undersell each other, not in interest asked, but in credit given. They demanded higher interest than had been ever exacted before, but they contented themselves with inferior securities. The did not trouble themselves with petty transactions at Bank rates of profit, but "financed" new concerns on a prodigious scale of business. In other words, they took up the whole of some great speculation—say, a railway or other such work—and found the money for it on condition of getting a lion's share of the ultimate profits. Millions are soon spent on terms like these, and presently the Companies found themselves with their capital sunk in investments which could only be productive at some distant date. In some instances, no doubt, the management was injudicious—perhaps worse, and actual losses were incurred; but in the majority of cases the advances are probably covered by material securities, only the securities are inconvertible. A Finance Company, with its assets represented by an unfinished railway, is naturally in difficulties. It may possess property to the extent, perhaps, of its paid-up capital, but it is not property on which money can be raised. Its only remaining resource is a "call," and the prospect of a call puts its shareholders in such a fright that they are ready not only to give their shares away, but to pay anybody for taking them.

If it is inquired why these Companies should have committed themselves to so hazardous a system of business, the reply is to be found in the conditions on which they started. They were bound to make profits enough to provide handsome dividends and maintain the value of their shares, and they could only get those profits out of ventures proportionately exceptional. Men will not pay twice over for a thing, even when that thing is money, and a borrower who was taxed 30 per cent. for interest balanced his account by a reduction in security. Good negotiable securities, on which money could at any moment be raised, would not have brought all this interest with them. If the customers of the Finance Companies could have offered such securities; they need not have paid 30 per cent. interest, or the fourth part of that rate; but they could give no such pledges, and so they had to comply with the demand. Lender and borrower were thus fairly matched; but the lender, on the prescribed terms of business, had no alternative. He could not get 30 per cent. and good security too, and if the shareholders insisted on the profit they could not escape the peril.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

French Mail from Shanghai.

The Mail steamer Labourdonnais arrived yesterday afternoon with Shanghai papers of the 18th, one day later than those of the Singapore. The French steamer from Japan reached Shanghai on the 17th, with news from Yokohama to the 11th, which is thus epitomised in the Recorder:—

The only items of news of any importance are that it is now generally known that the payment of the balance of the Indemnity money is postponed for twelve months, and that the new tariff in settled, and will be signed in a few days. It is expected to come into force on the 1st July. The change in the currency is not to take place till 1st January, 1868. The danger with respect to going upon the Tokaido does not seem to be over, a party of foreigners who were going upon the road received information that a Prince was about to pass; but not having had any warning of the circumstance from their Consuls they expressed their intention of going on. They however made enquiries at the next Guard house and were informed that the Prince had passed and they could proceed. The Municipal Council appears to be carrying on the affairs of the Settlement with activity.

The N. C. Daily News says:—"From Hankew, we learn that on the 12th of June, the wreck and cargo of the ship Guinevere were sold by public auction, and realised Tls. 300,

Queen's Road Grievances.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS."

SIR,—Much remains to be done still to make this city, what it should be. Any poor fellow whose lot it is to live in the Queen's Road surrounded by Chinese is greatly to be pitied, because an undisturbed night's rest is perfectly out of the question particularly in hot weather, when it's necessary to leave open doors and windows. Drunken sailors reel by singing, Chinamen pass in swarms laughing and talking as if the whole were deaf, chair coolies f ll out on their way home about their earnings, goldsmiths and tinkers hammer away until the small hours of morning, Chinese Minstrels with their harmonious voices and instruments salute your ears until you are almost frantic, but one evil worse than all remains still to be told. Chinese women of the very worst and lowest kind roam about by dozens screaming and larking up till 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning.

Hongkong has advanced rapidly in civilisation, but in this respect it stands the same as in its very first days of infancy.

Yours Obediently,
A QUEEN'S ROAD SUFFERER.

Small Grievances.

Few things are more annoying than to feel oneself the victim of one of those grievances which are not big enough to excite much indignation in the world at large, but which are sufficiently great to be distinctly perceptible to one's own imagination. A man in a dangerous illness has the consolation, such as it is—and to some minds it is not a small one—of gaining a certain dignity from the magnitude of the evil. He learns to consider his complaint as in some sense a source of additional importance, and a claim to the respect of those around him. But an unfortunate being in a state of seasickness (some heartless persons would even extend the principle to toothache) is not only miserable, but ludicrous. Every one who is not afflicted has a right to poke fun at him, to look on at his writhings with palpable complacency, and to treat his complainings from a distinctly comic point of view. There is a beautiful principle of compensation which allows an invalid to derive an apparently unnatural triumph from a good serious chronic disease, and to look upon himself with pride as a remarkably fine medical specimen. The luckless being whose sufferings are merely temporary and trifling can only take it out in ill temper, and is liable to be preached at by thoughtless observers for that very natural indulgence.—Saturday Review.
